when a child like this is part of your life. Any parent/ aunty/ grandparent will love this image, but because I don't know Jacob, I have to judge the image on its technical meritsFirstly the lighting on the left is harsh, and leaves some blown out highlights in his hair and his cheeks dark and over 'reddened'. With a little fill in light from a reflector and exposure comp down you would have more facial features and less bright hair. Having said that you have sharp eyes (the main area of focus) and some great highlights in the eyes. We felt the image a little posed, but this would be great in a series of photos with lots of different expressions. 17 1 Full Flaps, Lower the Undercarriage 14 pts Place 2nd Place

1 4 Day Ended 9 pts Place Comments: Windmills are great subjects for mone prints and silhouettes, but might have been better in straight black and white rather than sepia. You have done well to get a sharp windmill and it suits a portrait format. The colors here are a little strange, but in B&W with some contrast to enhance those clouds behind this windmill will really stand out. 2 14 Water Dance 12 pts Place Merit Comments: This image raised a lot of discussion as it seems to break a lot of rules', but also has been really well done. The reflection is gorgeous with the ripples leading to the foreground. It is clear that you might have gotten wet trying to take a picture without those reeds at the front, but hey do not detract from the image at all. The sky is nice (but could be enhanced with a little contrast in curves) and there is a good tonal range. Comments: Another beautiful bird photo that boasts of good technique and patience. The position of the bird in the frame is right and the sharpness of the bird's eye is almost scary (but magic!). We felt that this image was a little distracted by the big green space of blurred green that was bright enough to draw away the eye. A little crop off the left and a small vignette might just draw the eye back to where we want it. A great image that just missed out on a merit.
